Note on the Construction of the Tables.

The several Tables and Calculations annexed have been compiled and computed in the following manner by Mr. Henry Edwards, assisted by Mr. C. Taylor, and Mr. H. M. Atcherley;

At the termination of the epidemic of cholera in 1854, the Secretary of State for the Home Department, at the suggestion of the President of the General Board of Health, addressed a letter to the Lambeth and the Southwark and Vauxhall Water Companies, desiring them respectively to furnish a list of the streets and houses severally supplied by them. These returns were made according to their own districts formed for the collection of the rates, and were comprised in 12 different books.

The deaths from cholera and diarrhoea during the years 1849 and 1854 in the several districts supplied by the companies were extracted from the certified copies of deaths in the possession of the Registrar-General. Each extract gave the following particulars:— the date of death, the house where the death occurred, the age and sex, the occupation of the deceased, and the cause of death. These extracts were taken out of 40 large folio volumes containing about 170,000 entries.

The next step was to find out by which company the houses where the deaths occurred were supplied, or if the water used was taken from other sources.

Great difficulty was experienced in apportioning the deaths to the several streets and houses to which they were due, owing to the registration and the water companies' districts not being co-extensive, and from there being so many streets, courts, &c. of the same name. By reference, however, to ordnance and parochial maps, and by personal examination on the spot, it is believed that the deaths returned to the respective streets are correct, but there may be found some inaccuracies as to the district in which the streets are entered, as, even by personal inquiry, it was in many cases impossible to obtain correct information as to whether deaths had occurred in these streets, from the length of time that had elapsed, and from the shifting character of the population. But these inaccuracies will be so trifling as not to affect the general results.

The first series of tables show the deaths from cholera and diarrhoea in houses supplied with water by the Lambeth and Southwark and Vauxhall Companies and from unknown sources, arranged according to registration and registration sub-districts. In some of the outlying districts, a considerable portion of the deaths are returned as occurring in houses supplied with water from unknown sources, although there is little doubt they derived their supply from one or other of the companies. But from the manner in which the houses were returned by the companies, it was impossible to identify them with the deaths with certainty, and they were therefore entered in the column headed unknown sources.

The first summary table shows the total deaths from cholera and diarrhœa in houses supplied by the two companies respectively, and from unknown sources, in each registration sub-district, together with the number of houses in 1851, the population in 1851, and the estimated population in 1849 and 1854; the estimated constant population per house in each sub-district; the estimated population of the total number supplied, and the deaths from cholera and diarrhœa per 1,000 of the estimated population living in such houses.

The estimated population of 1849 and 1854, is deduced from the population of 1841 and 1851, the increase being calculated according to geometrical progression.

The estimated constant population per house is obtained by dividing the population of 1851 by the number of inhabited houses in the same year.

The estimated population of houses supplied is procured by multiplying the number of the houses supplied by the estimated constant population per house in the district or sub-district concerned.

It will be observed that in several instances there appears to be a larger number of houses supplied than were to be found in the Census Returns of 1851 for those sub-districts. This apparent anomaly is explained by a great increase in the number of houses erected since 1851. In some districts, such as Bermondsey and Lambeth, almost new towns have sprung up within the last few years. This discrepancy is also partly occasioned by streets running into two or more districts, in which case the total number of houses is entered in only one district, thus creating an apparent excess of houses in one district, and a corresponding diminution in another. The deaths are, however, returned in the several districts where they occurred.

In the proportions in the last columns of the tables, the estimated population in the houses supplied, has been used as the basis of the calculations.

The second summary table shows the results of the previous tables in the nine registration districts supplied by the companies.
